

Conference Agenda – to be updated shortly

About the Conference

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is widely being used in business applications and industries to streamline operations and improving efficiencies. It is also enabling businesses to work smarter and faster, doing more with significantly less. It is considered as an umbrella under which a number of different technologies that provide holistic end-to-end solutions reside. Marketing services, supply chain management, manufacturing, finance and banking, healthcare, education, waste management and transportation are some areas that benefit from AI applications which can generate solutions that can automate and predict.

The objective of this conference is to provide a platform to academicians, industry practitioners and researchers to share their views and experiences which can be used to identify where in the value chain industrial / commercial / manufacturing operations can be improved.
